Economic Overview

Still slow growth

The economy grew by +1.5% in 2015 supported by domestic demand. Consumption was up +2.6%, helped by near-zero retail sales prices (+0.5% in 2015). The pick-up in investment (+4.1%) was related to a surge in capital formation in transportation equipment (+25.6%) and construction (+4.1%).

GDP should expand by a more modest +1.1% in 2016. Negative investment is explained to a large extent by base effects as in 2015 increase was particularly significant. Although the improvement in labor market will continue and the unemployment rate should fall to 11% by 2017, private consumption is expected to slow down along with a diminished "oil dividend". Exports will also decline as the euro is not expected to depreciate much further. Smaller price-competitiveness gains affect textile manufacturing, which faces strong competition from Asian and American exports (priced in USD).

Financing the (high) public debt does not seem to be a problem anymore

After years of austerity, the fiscal deficit has narrowed impressively. It should stand at -2.9% of GDP this year, down from -4.4% in 2015. This means that Portugal will miss again the fiscal target set by the European Commission (revised to -2.5% of GDP in August). However, the EC has so far been lenient. It did not sanction Portugal for missing budget-deficit targets last year and saved the country up to 0.2% of GDP in fines.

Thanks to these fiscal efforts, in 2016 public debt should stabilize just below 128% of GDP, still a worrying level. However, financing the public debt and the fiscal deficit does not seem to be an issue anymore. This positive development can be attributed at least in part to the ECB's quantitative easing program, launched in 2015 and extended to EUR80bn per month. This contributed to reducing the average yield on Portuguese bonds. It now stands below 3% for 10Y bonds against 7.1% three years ago and 16% in 2012. The move also eased debt servicing.

End of the political deadlock

The October 2015 elections led to a hung Parliament. Yet negotiators managed to reach an agreement. A host of left-leaning parties formed a coalition government under the leadership of acting Prime Minister, Antonio Costa of the Socialist party. Political deadlock, for the time being, seems to be over.
